“Chiang Mai Initiative Multilaterals; the significance for East Asian Regionalism”

Joel Rathus, Adelaide University

Joel Rathus is a PhD Candidate at Adelaide University, Australia and a Monbukagakusho Scholar based at Meiji University, Tokyo.

The presentation is focused on three problems; what is it about the CMI that allows it successfully multilateralize while other, arguably more important, elements of regional integration are ignored? Why is it that many scholars and involved parties doubted that the CMI would progress? And what are the likely implications of multilateralization of the CMI for East Asian regionalism at large.
